Intradural dural arteriovenous fistulas are rare with nonspecific clinical and radiographic findings. MR imaging is considered the modality of choice for the diagnosis of these lesions, and shunt flow is usually demonstrated with MR angiography. In this report, we present two cases of intradural dural arteriovenous fistulas, in which MR angiography was performed in the subarachnoid space. In one case, the shunt flow was confirmed with digital subtraction angiography; the shunt flow included the temporal dural sinus and the nidus of the fistula. In the other case, by using a 0.5-mm slice thickness, we could depict the shunt flow in the spinal canal and the dural sinus with shunt confirmation. MR angiography is a useful technique for diagnosing intradural dural arteriovenous fistulas because it visualizes the shunt in the subarachnoid space and the dural sinus in the cranial cavity. How Google's Router Gets Around The DMCA And Creates Broadband Switches - rbanffy ====== darklajid My guess: That's the link of the day for some people who think it's April 1st. Which was the day that a commercial shut down my ARP-and-VLAN enabled home router. That made me remember a fun side project last year - In a local break room (I'd be in my office anyway) I got a wireless receiver, a radio, a f678ea9f9e
